

St. Joseph High School

Responsibility, Motivation and Truth

St. Joseph High School, a Catholic all-girls school, empowers young women to find their voices, grow in faith and become the leaders of tomorrow.

Located in historic Downtown Brooklyn, the school was founded over a century ago by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Brentwood, L.I. Nationally recognized leaders in the education of young women, the Sisters believed then – as they do now – that if you educate a woman, you educate a nation.

Today, St. Joseph High School provides academic rigor and excellent college and career preparation for young women of diverse backgrounds and faiths, hailing from all five boroughs of New York City.

At St. Joseph High School, young women experience a strong academic and values-based curriculum in a safe, dynamic environment where they are motivated to be responsible for their actions, rise above peer pressure and learn to be true to themselves.

The faculty understands how girls learn and creates a climate with high expectations for academic achievement and mutual respect. Faculty and students form an extraordinary bond that often lasts a lifetime.

Building STEAM

State-of-the-art technology across the curriculum, combined with new engineering core courses, introduce all students to the basics of measurement, spatial reasoning, design and building using hands-on and digital learning tools.

Emerging from MIT's Center for Bits and Atoms, the school's new Fab Lab Connect Program provides a platform for education and innovation using technology and digital fabrication.

The visual and performing arts program allows students to expand their imaginations through theater, dance, speech, music and video production. Developing technical abilities and personal vision, the school's young women build confidence and self-discipline while enhancing analytical and communication skills.

Schools all over the country are getting on board with STEAM education, so what sets St. Joseph High School apart?

As a Catholic school, it is not simply focused on technological and scientific innovation for its own sake, but rather so that students may be of service to the world. The school community has the opportunity to explore the rich tradition of Catholic social teaching together, considering how faith and values can shape everything from medical ethics, to labor, to economic development, to the use of natural resources.

Each student is prepared to make informed judgments regarding how to apply her knowledge and abilities in STEAM fields, or any professional occupation, in a manner that respects human dignity and the dignity of the natural world.

Furthermore, driven by growing student interest in civic engagement and political participation, St. Joseph High School has joined a growing coalition of Catholic and Jewish independent schools in the NYC area committed to delving into their ethical traditions and the foundations of the U.S. government, in order to teach civic virtues and build civic leadership in their educational communities.

This program, Civic Spirit, supports teachers and students in their quest to understand and respond to local, community-based needs.

Choosing an All-Girls School

A study by the National Coalition of Girls Schools analyzes the responses to the High School Survey of Student Engagement, which was taken by 13,000 girls attending all-girls schools, co-ed independent schools and co-ed public schools.

The responses provide overwhelming support for the value of an all-girls educational environment.

Students attending all-girls schools were shown to:

- Have higher aspirations and greater motivation.
- Feel more comfortable being themselves and expressing their ideas.
- Show greater gains on core academic and life skills.
